

A world map with a black outline of the continents. A red dot is located in East Asia, specifically in the region of China. From this red dot, numerous dashed gray lines radiate outwards to various green dots. These green dots are distributed across the map, with a high concentration in East Asia (Japan, Korea, Philippines, etc.), a smaller cluster in Europe, and a few scattered dots in Africa, Australia, and South America. The lines represent connections or relationships between the central red dot and the peripheral green dots.
